Bartholomew of Farne

Born to Scandinavian parents at Whitby he was mocked for his foreign name, Tostig, and so changed it to William. He was a tearaway as a youth, but after seeing visions of the Virgin Mary, Christ and the Apostles, he travelled to Norway where he was ordained.

Returning to England, he took the name Bartholomew, and became a monk at Durham. But inspired by visions of Cuthbert calling him there, he went to live on the tiny island of Inner Farne. He stayed there, in its bleak conditions, for the next 42 years.

He was not easy to live with. Aelwin, another hermit on Inner Farne, was so irritated by him that he left, never to return. He was impatient with the self-important people who visited him there, but had a deep love of the island and of its creatures. Bartholomew spent his life praying, working and singing in solitude. His death followed a painful illness, during which he carved his own coffin out of stone. He died in 1193.
